Adorno, on the other hand, in his habilitationsschrift, later published as Kierkegaard: Construction of the Aesthetic, is critical of Kierkegaard's politics, though Adorno's indirect target was Heidegger and existentialism more generally. Adorno argues that Kierkegaard's philosophy of inwardness ultimately reflects only the bourgeois interior of his time, and that Kierkegaard falls into the idealism he sought to escape because, like the existentialists, he fails to follow a concrete...

Danish philosopher Soren Kierkegaard (1813-1855) is perhaps best known for his theory of the three stages of human existence: the aesthetic stage, the ethical stage, and the religious stage. The aesthetic stage is not about being an aesthete, as one might suspect. Rather, a person in the aesthetic stage pursues pleasure and avoids commitment.

Kierkegaard Construction of the Aesthetic

Kierkegaard discusses the aesthetic stage according to which the ethical stage is emergent in the aesthetic attitude as a way of living, and is only complete when developed in the universality of the ethical stage and then the absoluteness of the religious stage, though not in a way which leads to the destruction of the aesthetic stage.
in german bookshops in february 1933, kierkegaard challenges not only the founder but also the whole tradition of existentialism, and played an important role in the formation of the frankfurt school’s critical theory.
